Careers in Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) are growing at well above the national average as many employers highly value the unique skill sets, perspectives, and changes that these professionals bring to their organizations. While some companies are pulling back, those that see DEI as crucial to their businesses have invested further. DEI specialists' main goal is to ensure inclusion and equity in organizations through a variety of methods, including managing diversity programs, projects, trainings, recruitment and retention, policy development, and data analysis. Several alums of the department of conflict resolution, human security and global governance are employed in different facets of DEI work. Join us to learn how three CRHSGG alumni are using the communication and collaboration and project management skills gained in the program to further social and organizational justice in this exciting expanding field.
